When she were young, people washed clothes as they did their skin--wi their hands--and used plenty o water and soap, and bleached em on the grass till they were as white as a blossom. Mangles was mangles in those days, as you might roll the parson s lawn with, as well as his sheets, and not the fig-a-maree iron clothes-horses they was now! She driv off her washing as long s she could, and slopped out a few things in a pan, she did, but she were obliged to have a wash once a month, and she were to her wits ends then for sure! Just at this stage of her grumbles, while she was sitting in her old arm-chair, with a red earthen pan beside her, containing what were by courtesy called fine things, and which she was supposed to be washing. A tap at the cottage door announced a visitor. Now Grandmother Furbey, who was very precise, disliked exceedingly to be caught in her laundry attire--i.e., an old gown, drawn up through the pocket-holes, over her grey linsey skirt, with the sleeves rolled to the shoulders from her skinny arms, an old cap on, and a warm shawl to keep her chest safe from the steam; and to her further horror, who should catch her in this gear but Mrs. Evans, the...
